Margate Cliffs. Beautiful with a sense of danger amid their beauty are these, for the rust of Time is on them and the teeth of the tides have gnawed great holes and rents in their whiteness, till the hand and skill of man has had to shore them up with mighty iron supports, and face them here and there with walls of brick running from top to bottom of their great chalk bastions.

Dear Mum.
Your letter arrived this morning, sorry to hear your back as been so queer again, but no doubt these winds are the cause. Hope Fred is alright I do miss him & Frankie's first words this morning were is my Daddy gone, it is now raining.
Love Alice
